WORKING PAPERS / WORK IN PROGRESS

| | |
|---|--|
| More Bark Than Bite? Affective Polarization Around the 2024 U.S. Presidential Election with Toke Aidt and Edoardo Gallo | |
| <ul style="list-style-type: none">• We conduct a three-wave experiment around the 2024 U.S. Presidential Election to compare survey and behavioral measures of affective polarization. We find that the standard survey measure, the thermometer gap, misses critical dynamics captured by behavioral metrics which questions recent findings suggesting that polarization plateaued. | |
| Informational Regime Choice in an Asymmetric Public Good Game - Experimental Evidence with Edoardo Gallo | |
| <ul style="list-style-type: none">• We conduct an online public goods experiment to study how information regimes affect cooperation when a central actor can appropriate resources. When regimes are exogenously imposed, manipulable communication outperforms full verifiability; when chosen endogenously, commitment to verifiable disclosure yields the best outcomes. | |
